5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

We're ridiculously spoiled in this city, sure. But it's time to get greedy again. The Red Sox, Patriots, Celtics and Bruins have all won championships in their respective sports over the past 17 years with the Sox and Pats having won multiple titles (three for the Red Sox, five for the Patriots). But rarely have all four teams — or even three teams — been truly great at the same time. With the Red Sox, Patriots and Celtics set to be major title contenders in the coming months and with the Bruins having a good shot of making noise, too — we could be set to enter another golden age of Boston sports. Read about it on Page 9 and at metro.us.

DEMI LOVATO STABLE AFTER SUSPECTED OD

1 Pop star Demi Lovato was taken to a Los Angeles hospital on Tuesday due to a suspected overdose, according to media reports. Lovato, 25, has spoken openly about cocaine and alcohol abuse. Representatives for Lovato did not respond to a request for comment but People magazine, quoting an unidentified source, reported she was "okay and stable." TMZ, quoting law enforcement sources, reported that Lovato was found unconscious at her home and was treated with Narcan, an emergency treatment for suspected opioid and drug overdoses. Los Angeles police said they had responded to a medical emergency on Tuesday involving a woman on the Hollywood Hills street where Lovato reportedly has a home, but declined to name the person. Lovato released a song last month called "Sober" in which she sang, "Momma, I'm so sorry, I'm not sober anymore, And daddy, please forgive me for the drinks spilled on the floor, To the ones who never left me We've been down this road before, I'm so sorry, I'm not sober anymore."

COSBY IS 'SEXUALLY VIOLENT PREDATOR': PANEL

2 A Pennsylvania state advisory board recommended that Bill Cosby be deemed a "sexually violent predator," requiring that the convicted comedian undergo counseling as well as register as a sex offender for life, prosecutors said on Tuesday. The 81-year-old entertainer, known as "America's Dad" for his role in the 1980s TV hit "The Cosby Show," was found guilty in April of drugging and sexually assaulting a former friend at his Philadelphia-area home in 2004. The victim, Andrea Constand, was one of dozens of women who have accused the comedian of a string of sexual assaults dating back decades. Hers was the only accusation recent enough to be criminally prosecuted. In a court filing on Tuesday, Montgomery County District Attorney Kevin Steele asked Judge Steven O'Neill to schedule a hearing to determine whether to accept the recommendation of the state's sexual offender assessment board. Cosby, who is allowed to leave his home only to visit doctors or lawyers ahead of his September sentencing, will have the right to challenge the recommendation.

WILDFIRES KILL AT LEAST 74 IN GREECE'S 'POMPEII'

3 Greece's prime minister told of the "unspeakable tragedy" the country faced after at least 74 people were killed by wildfires that swept through a resort, trapping people in cars and on the edge of cliffs as others were forced to jump off to survive. Scores of gutted cars lined streets in the coastal town, east of Athens, melted by the intensity of the heat.

IVANKA TRUMP CLOSES FASHION LINE

4 President Donald Trump's daughter Ivanka Trump on Tuesday said she was shutting her fashion line to focus on her role as an informal White House adviser, where she is working on advancing working women. Since Trump's surprise November 2016 election, his family has faced criticism that its portfolio of real estate and consumer goods businesses, which lean heavily on the Trump name as a marker of luxury, conflict with their roles as Washington officials. Critics of the president called the shutting of the brand a victory for a boycott of Trump-tied businesses that began late in the 2016 campaign. "After 17 months in Washington, I do not know when or if I will ever return to the business, but I do know that my focus for the foreseeable future will be the work I am doing here in Washington," Ivanka Trump, 36, said in a statement on Tuesday. Amid criticism of potential conflicts of interest, Ivanka Trump in 2017 gave up day-to-day management of her clothing company and put its assets in a trust managed by family members.

TRUMP SET TO GIVE OUT $12M IN AID TO US FARMERS

5 The Trump administration on Tuesday said it would pay up to $12 billion to help U.S. farmers weather a growing trade battle with China, the European Union and others, a clear signal the president is determined to stick with tariffs as his weapon of choice in the conflict. The move to cushion the blow for a politically important constituency - rural and agricultural states that supported U.S. President Donald Trump by wide margins in the election but have been targeted by China's retaliation to his trade tactics - was met with broad criticism by many farmers and farm-belt lawmakers. Trump's trade policies have become central in several rural-state U.S. Senate races ahead of congressional elections in November, as Democrats there try to keep hold of several seats that Republicans have targeted. The president, speaking at an event in Kansas City on Tuesday, aggressively reaffirmed his support for tariffs and pledged that ultimately, "farmers will be the biggest beneficiary." "Just be a little patient," Trump said. To that end, the relief package is intended to serve as only a temporary boost to farmers as the U.S. and China negotiate over trade issues.

‘Pokin’ at the ocean’s unknown: Harvard experts create advanced deep sea device

A “pokeball” device out of Harvard could capture and release sea creatures to further deep sea exploration.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Experts say that more than 80 percent of our ocean is unexplored, and that means up to a million marine species have yet to be studied. But a new innovation out of Harvard could help further deep sea exploration, and it’s kind of like a real-life pokeball.

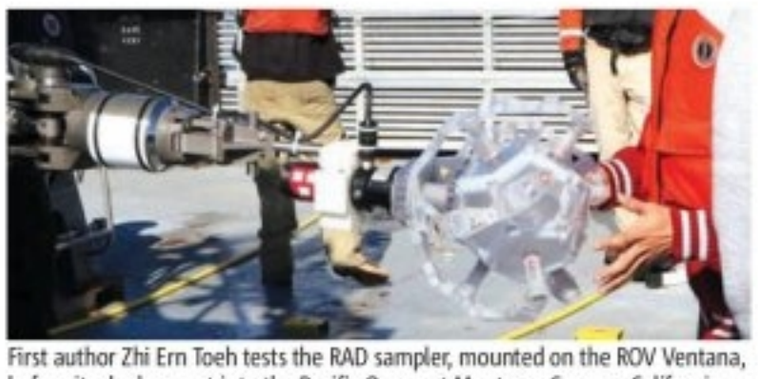
Researchers at Harvard’s Wyss Institute for Biologically Inspired Engineering, the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study and the John A. Paulson School of Engineering and Applied Sciences worked together to create a device that could catch and release soft sea creatures without damaging them.

This device was described in a release as a sort of underwater pokeball, and it’s actually a semi-accurate description, explained paper author Zhi Ern Teoh.

The innovation, called a Rotary Actuated Dodecahedron (RAD), starts out as a flat, 2-dimensional sheet that can then fold itself into a 3-dimensional shape — a dodecahedron, like a 12-sided die — using a single motor.

The RAD can enclose delicate sea creatures, like jellyfish, squid and octopi, and let them go without causing them any harm.

The fact that the so-called underwater pokeball could capture sea creatures in such a gentle way is crucial to marine biology, explained David Gruber, a Radcliffe fellow and professor of biology and environmental sciences.



First author Zhi Ern Toeh tests the RAD sampler, mounted on the ROV Ventana, before its deployment into the Pacific Ocean at Monterey Canyon, California.
WYSS INSTITUTE AT HARVARD UNIVERSITY

“A sea creature would come into this dodecahedron and get a doctors checkup and then we’d let it go.”
David Gruber

“If we’re going to go analyze a really expensive piece of art, like the Mona Lisa or a Van Gogh, I wouldn’t imagine we would go and rip a piece off,” he said. “So it’s in the same vein when we’re thinking about how we’re exploring life in the deep sea.”

Scientists still don’t have a lot of tools for deep sea exploration, Gruber noted, and many that exist are rigid and tend to harm soft-bodied sea creatures, even killing them. Plus, scientists want to study sea creatures in their natural habitats, rather than always bringing them up to the surface, and inside this so-called pokeball, that could become a reality.

How could this so-called underwater pokeball help deep sea exploration?

Researchers tested RAD at the Mystic Aquarium in Connecticut, where it successfully collected and released moon jellyfish underwater, and also at the Monterey Bay Aquarium Research Institute, where the research team used it to capture soft organisms like squid and jellyfish in their natural habitats and release them without harm.

This is a stepping stone, Gruber said, to furthering deep sea exploration. He said the team plans to add on to the device so they can study sea creatures as they are inside.

“We see this can work and can enclose animals delicately, so we can start adding new sensors, imaging equipment, get DNA,” he said. “A sea creature would come into this dodecahedron and get a doctors check-up and then we’d let it go.”

Teoh sees this device being used in other situations as well, like outer space exploration.

“I can think of deployable solar panels for satellites or deployable habitats in space,” he said. Getting things into orbit is expensive and hard, so transporting a device that folds up small and flat would be easier, and since RAD doesn’t have a lot of motors, it’s easier to control, he said.

Ultimately, the most exciting part of this innovation is its ability to be gentle, according to Gruber. He hopes this fosters more respect for marine life, especially the unknown creatures in the deep sea. With this, perhaps scientists could finally catch them all.

State AG to investigate JUUL

Maura Healey will look into if JUUL is doing enough to prevent minors from purchasing e-cigarettes.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey announced she is investigating e-cigarette company JUUL. TWITTER / @MASSAGO

Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey announced on Tuesday that she is investigating JUUL because of how the company markets to minors.

Healey's office has sent cease and desist letters to two online companies that host three websites — directeliquid.com, buyjuul.com and eonsmoke.com — ordering them to stop selling JUUL and other e-cigarettes products in the state without a proper age verification system.

In Massachusetts, a minimum sales age of at least 18 is required for the purchase of e-cigarettes and other electronic smoking devices, according to state regulations which Healey herself instituted in 2015.

The AG's office is investigating JUUL and the other e-cigarette companies to determine if they are actually selling to minors, thus violating state regulations.

"Just when teen cigarette use has hit a record low, juuling and vaping have become an epidemic in our schools with products that seem targeted to get young people hooked on nicotine," Healey said in a statement. "I am investigating JUUL and online sellers of their products to keep these highly addictive products out of the hands of children."

To some people, JUUL may not seem as addictive as a cigarette, but a JUUL nicotine pod is equivalent to a pack of cigarettes. This week, news broke that its users are suing the e-cigarette company because they got addicted to the JUUL nicotine.

That high JUUL nicotine level makes the vapes particularly addictive to minors, explained Dr. Jonathan Winickoff, director of Pediatric Research at the Tobacco Research and Treatment Center at Massachusetts General Hospital.

"The adolescent brain is uniquely sensitive to nicotine and can become addicted more rapidly and at lower exposure concentrations. The younger a teen starts smoking or vaping, the harder it will be to quit," he said in a statement. "As a pediatrician, it's my responsibility to educate teens and their parents to the dangers of JUULing, but it's our collective job to protect children and teens in our communities."

Officials say that JUUL and other e-cigarettes are also specifically trying to attract younger users through their variety of flavors, from Crème Brûlée to Fruit Medley. Shariel Joseph, a Watertown High School student and activist with The 84 Movement, a statewide movement of youth fighting tobacco in Massachusetts, said she's seen this first hand among her classmates.

"The tobacco and vaping industries use sweet flavors to make their products appeal to youth," she said in a statement. "When vapes first came out, there were advertisements about vapes being better for you than cigarettes and it made people who would never smoke a regular cigarette now want to try these products. Vapes and JUULs are commonly used around my school and community. To combat this pervasive vaping issue, it's time to hold the industry accountable."

"I am investigating JUUL and online sellers of their products to keep these highly addictive products out of the hands of children."

Maura Healey

As part of Healey's investigation, the AG's office has reached out to JUUL to ask about the number of people under 21 years old who use it or similar products, the company's efforts to monitor the effectiveness of its online age verification system, whether and how it monitors websites that sell the products, if it requires its associated retailers to have an age verification system and information about an "educational" program that JUUL marketed to Massachusetts schools.

Healey sent a letter to Massachusetts school districts last month regarding this education program, in which JUUL offers schools money to pilot their "prevention education program."

"There is a long history of tobacco companies attempting to sponsor and promote their education programming in schools," Healey wrote in the letter. "The U.S. Surgeon General and the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids have found that industry-sponsored prevention programs are ineffective and may even work to encourage kids to smoke."

In 2015, almost 50 percent of Massachusetts high school students reported having used e-cigarettes at least once, Healey noted. She encouraged schools to use free prevention resources or to buy evidence-based curricula rather than using the JUUL program.

6 Places to get your tiki on this summer

Sip the Legend of Kon Tiki at Tiger Mama. JOHN-MICHAEL LEACH

ISTOCK

Most cocktail fans don't usually associate the Hub with tropical beverages, but you actually don't have to look far to find a great tiki cocktail in the Boston area. Here are six hotspots you have to check out this season.

A4cade
This Cambridge bar isn't just a great place to get your game on, it's also one of the best places in the area to sip tiki cocktails. A4cade has a whole menu dedicated to the tropical libations, including funky beverages like the Land Shark, made with Privateer tiki, Angostura seven-year rum, cognac, sherry and passion fruit; and the Princess Peach's Downfall, made with Rumson rum, peach, pineapple, mint and citrus. 292 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, areafour.com/locations/a4cade

Kowloon
While this local restaurant is a bit of a trek away from the city, you can't make a round-up of local tiki drink spots without including Saugus' Kowloon. An institution along Route 1 for decades, Kowloon serves up an array of delicious Polynesian cocktails alongside a massive menu of Asian-inspired dishes. 948 Broadway, Saugus, kowloonrestaurant.com

Shōjō
A Chinatown gem, this fan-favorite bar and restaurant has a slew of tiki-style drinks. Shōjō's cocktail menu includes items like the Loneliest Monk, crafted with rum, pineapple, lime, and Frangelico; the Kamehameha, featuring Thai chili-infused vodka, lemon and coconut milk; as well as the traditional Mai Tai. 9A Tyler St., shojoboston.com

Tiger Mama
Tiffani Faison's Fenway hotspot has quite the tiki drink menu thanks to bar manager Brian Callahan, who took inspiration from Italy, Japan, the Middle East and other parts of the globe to come up with this version of the tiki beverage list. The offerings at Tiger Mama, which come in fun glassware like porcelain duckies and tiki skulls, range from the Legend of Kon Tiki, made with brown butter washed aquavit, pisco, chicha morada, coconut, banana, passion fruit, lemon and makrut lime; to the Silk Sling, made with aged Demerara rum, overproof St. Lucian rum, kiwi, amaro, Italian falernum, lemon, pineapple and soda. 1363 Boylston St., tigermamaboston.com

Tiki Rock
This Boston tiki bar definitely lives up to its name. A new addition to the local drink scene, Tiki Rock has a slew of tasty cocktails to match its funky decor. They also have large format drinks for multiple people dubbed luau libations, including the Painkiller, featuring Navy rum, pineapple, orange, coconut and nutmeg; as well as the Ohana Punch, featuring Absolut Elyx, aperol, pineapple, orange, lime and passion fruit. 2 Broad St., tikirock.com

UNI
Ken Oringer and Tony Messina's acclaimed izakaya at the Eliot Hotel got into the tiki game courtesy of beverage director Vikram Hegde. UNI has fun tiki beverages on its menu, including one that pays homage to the DC superhero the Flash dubbed the Barry Allen, made with tiki gin, cherry liqueur, pomegranate, yuzu and bitters. 370A Commonwealth Ave., uni-boston.com

What to expect from the 'Comedy Central Roast of Bruce Willis'

Just about everyone, including ex-wife Demi Moore, was on hand to skewer the star.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

"We actually just got word that a surprise guest has stopped by," actor Joseph Gordon-Levitt told the audience at the Hollywood Palladium in Los Angeles. "Ladies and gentlemen, Demi Moore."

As soon as the "Comedy Central Roast of Bruce Willis" host finished saying the 55-year-old actress' name, roasters and attendees alike erupted into a standing ovation. After all, her ex-husband was in the middle of getting skewered by Gordon-Levitt and a stage rife with celebrities known and otherwise, and joining the fray was no small matter.

Because the cable channel's latest celebrity roast was filmed nearly two weeks ago, most of its secrets — including Moore's appearance — have already been well-documented by the press. Even so, the taped special is set to air this weekend, and for everyone else who wasn't lucky enough to nab a ticket to the event, Moore and her fellow roasters' quips about the "Die Hard" star will feel brand new.

For those of you who weren't on hand for the occasion, here's a quick guide to the highlights of the "Comedy Central Roast of Bruce Willis."

Demi Moore

Moore's surprise appearance was one of the evening's top moments. Not only was Willis pleasantly surprised by the moment, but the actress' incisive jokes about him were all the more poignant considering their past relationship. "I look at our marriage like 'The Sixth Sense,'" she said as the audience looked on with bated breath. "You were dead the whole time."

Demi Moore surprised her former hubby at the latest Comedy Central roast. GETTY IMAGES

Nikki Glaser

Comedian Nikki Glaser, whose performances in the 2016 "Comedy Central Roast of Rob Lowe" and Netflix's "The StandUps" compilation, ruled the night in Moore's stead. "Your daughters must be so proud of their father, Ashton Kutcher," she told Willis at one point. Despite the target on Willis' bald head, however, Glaser scored even more points when she set her sights on Comedy Central itself. "Comedy Central has been so cool. They're like, 'You can say whatever you want. Just obviously not the n-word: Netflix,'" she joked. "Is this going to be on Netflix? I want people to see it."

Dennis Rodman

Not every moment at the Willis roast was a roaring success, however. When former star basketball player turned reality-television figure Dennis Rodman took the stage, his various attempts to elicit laughter from the crowd bombed hard. This was especially the case when he referenced North Korean leader Kim Jong-un. "You keep making these bomb movies like Kim," said Rodman, "but at least he is smart enough not to release his." He apologized for the joke and others that fell flat. Whether or not it makes the final edit, however, remains to be seen.

The 'Die Hard' Christmas movie debate

Perhaps one of the most-talked-about moments from the roast, came when Willis himself took the dais. The actor told plenty of jokes at his roasters' expense, including Edward Norton: "You've rubbed more people the wrong way than Harvey Weinstein." Yet the moment that stood out (and launched plenty of think pieces online) was Willis' declaration that the first "Die Hard" film was "not a Christmas movie."

"The Comedy Central Roast of Bruce Willis" premieres Sunday, July 29, at 10 p.m.

Woven furniture is in this season. ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

Spice up your patio with these woven furniture ideas

Get in on the season's biggest outdoor trends. KATELYN CHEF

What does woven, wicker, rattan and raffia weaved furniture all have in common, aside from the rich laced texture? Plaited chairs, small outdoor dining sets and woven baskets happen to be one of the biggest summer outdoor-living trends of the season. After all, you've seen the quintessential bistro sets on social media as well as those pretty cafés you pass on the street. Now, take that inspiration right to your patios and porches.

Bistro sets

You've probably have already admired the traditional blue and white woven French patio bistro set from afar. Or at least while you were sipping your café au lait at an Instagram-worthy coffee shop. Now, with retailers such as Target and Wayfair putting their own spin on the French outdoor sets you can integrate the trend at home. While, the blue-and-white color scheme is signature to the bistro set, other color varieties such as yellow and white, and green and white are also stylish porch additions.

Try it at home:

- Three-piece wicker patio French bistro set—white/blue-Project 62, Target, $300
- Bungalow rose lintgen French stacking patio dining chair-set of 2, Wayfair, $219
- Coral Coast Global Bay outdoor bistro set, Hayneedle, $230

Rattan and raffia accents

The great thing about the laced and woven furniture trend is that the look can be versatile—meaning it's practical whether you decide to use it for indoor or outdoor use. When decorating a covered porch or screened-in patio, rattan and raffia textured pieces can add a new look to your space. If you're new to trying the entwined style, try incorporating one piece such as an ottoman (or large basket) and see how it flows with your vision.

Try it at home:

- Tabitha rattan ottoman, Urban Outfitters, $149
- Avocet rattan fan back accent chair, Opalhouse, Target, $160
- Set of three white-dipped seagrass hampers, Kalalou, Junglaow, $168

Macramé and braided additions

Woven and braided outdoor accents are as statement-making as woven furniture. Looking for a fresh take on a hammock or footstool? Weather-resistant macramé might just be your new go-to. We're loving this ivory braided weather-resistant Opalhouse hammock from Target. After all, it's summer. Relax a little.

Try it at home:

- Macramé hammock with fringe-natural, Opalhouse, Target, $100
- Surya Malmo Sphere Pouf, Ottoman, Hayneedle, $107
- Three-piece macramé plant hanger indoor outdoor hand-knit hanging planter, wood stick basket wall art, Walmart, $17

BOSTON SPORTS HOLY GRAIL

Rob Gronkowski, Tom Brady and James White celebrate on Opening Day at Fenway Park in 2017. GETTY IMAGES

Had the ball not slipped through the raised hands of Asante Samuel 3,825 days ago in Super Bowl XLII against the Giants (not that we're counting), this article would be drastically different.

But the Patriots' loss in Arizona on Feb. 3, 2008 not only ended what would have been the first 19-0 season in NFL history, it also interrupted what would have been three major sports championships for this city in the span of eight months.

We're spoiled in Boston. I get it. But we always strive for better.

The definition of domination in American sports is a World Series crown, a Super Bowl title and either an NBA or NHL championship in the span of the end of October of one year and the middle of June in the next.

With the Red Sox currently owning the best record in baseball, the Patriots favored to reach the Super Bowl yet again, and the Celtics favored to represent the Eastern Conference in the 2019 NBA Finals – we could be preparing to enter the greatest sports stretch in the history of Boston. That's certainly saying something considering what's transpired in this city over the past 17 years.

In 2004-05 we got the first two down, with the Red Sox ending the curse in the Fall of 2004 and then the Patriots upending the Eagles in Super Bowl XXXIX in Jacksonville. But the Celtics were led by dudes like Raef LaFrentz and Ricky Davis at the time, nowhere close to a championship. The Bruins also had zero shot at winning it all in 2005 … well, because pro hockey did not exist that year due to the NHL lockout.

The eight-month stretch between the fall of 2013 and the spring of 2014 also offered up some promise of the Grail, but we again fell short. The Sox somehow captured the 2013 World Series with that unlikely John Lackey, Koji Uehara, Mike Napoli group and the Patriots (as always) were legit threats to win the Super Bowl. The Bruins were also thought of as serious Stanley Cup threats having just lost in the 2013 Cup Final to the Blackhawks. (The Celtics had just traded away Kevin Garnett and

Sports Holy Grail

No North American city has ever won all four major sports championships in the same year. Detroit, however, won the MLB, NFL and NHL titles in a remarkable six month stretch in 1935–36. This was before the NBA even existed.

Paul Pierce and were in the early stages of their rebuild.)

But as we ultimately found out that Patriots team was still a year away from being a champion. That injury-laden group lost to the Broncos in Denver. It wasn't until the next year that the Pats got back on track, toppling Seattle in the Big Game. Meanwhile the 2013-14 Bruins, despite winning the Presidents' Trophy that season, flamed out in the second round to the hated Canadiens.

All of our teams – the Red Sox, Patriots, Celtics and Bruins – have won championships since the spring of 2008, and the Sox and Pats were winning titles in the handful of years prior.

But rarely have all four teams been great at the same time.

Boston remains the best sports city in America, no doubt. But the Holy Grail of pro sports remains elusive.
